The Sub-Fund may use derivatives to reduce its exposure to various investment risks (hedging), for efficient portfolio management, and to directly seek investment gains.

The investment manager uses economic data to narrow the possible list of countries and sectors (top-down strategy), then uses research into individual issuers, including qualitative analysis and interviews with senior management to determine which companies' securities to invest in (bottom-up strategy).

The Sub-Fund is managed actively without reference to any benchmark.

Risk Disclaimer

The risk and reward indicator illustrates where the Sub-Fund is positioned in terms of its possible risks relative to its potential rewards. The higher the Sub-Fund's position on this scale, the greater the possible reward, but also the greater risk of losing money. This risk indicator is calculated using historical data, which cannot be used as a prediction for the future. Therefore the risk classification may change over time. Even if the Sub-Fund is in the lowest risk class you can lose money, as no investments are entirely risk free.

Liquidity risk - Certain securities could become hard to sell at a desired time and price.

Counterparty risk - The Sub-Fund could lose money if an entity with which it does business becomes unwilling or unable to honor its commitments to the Sub-Fund.

Management risk - Portfolio management techniques that have worked well in normal market conditions could prove ineffective or detrimental during unusual conditions.

Operational risk - In any market, but especially in emerging markets, the fund could lose some or all of its money through a failure in asset safekeeping or through fraud, corruption, political actions or any other unexpected events.
